Tebowing falls to Kappernicking

Supreme Court denies Tim Tebow's appeal in landmark case Tebow v. Kaepernick, denying his prayer for injunctive relief after Colin Kaepernick's signature move steals spotlight. Above: Tebow's Tebowing and Kaepernick's Kappernicking

After a year in which he was constantly the number one story on ESPN, ESPN2, and ESPN8 The "OCHO," Timothy Richard Tebow has essentially dropped off the face of the earth after playing a measly 73 snaps in the 2012 season. In order to get himself back into relevance Tebow has filed a lawsuit against the San Francisco 49ers' quarterback Colin Kaepernick who recently has taken over as the number one quarterback talked about on the sports networks.

The suit alleges trademark infringement and conversion. Tebow insists that he has the exclusive right to use bodily motions in connection with a terminology of his last name+ing. This was violated when Kaepernick raises his arms and kisses them in what he call Kappernicking.

Tebow has also alleged conversion by Kappernick. The alleged conversion is of Tebow's popularity and excitement generated on television.

An undisclosed source from the Vatican, who claims to be part of Tebow's "inner circle," believes the lawsuit Tebow's way of attempting to remain in the headlines after it was evident that no team from the National Football League, or even the Canadian Football League would take a chance on the man who provided excellent waterboy duties for Mark Sanchez this past season.

A close friend of Kappernick's told the Letter of the Law that Colin is proud that Tebow resorted to this lawsuit. "[Kappernick] feels honored that Tebow would want to sue him. There is a certain Godlike feeling to having a third string quarterback feel threatened enough by you to initiate litigation."

The case is set to go to trial on November 12th, 2013, however, there is fear by Tebow's attorney that at the current rate of decline in Tebow's popularity the case will be moot by the time trial begins because no one will remember his gestures or former popularity. In an effort to avoid this, Tebow is releasing six monthly editions of a magazine titled "TebowTime" which will be filled with pictures of him praying on a variety of subjects. The magazine will be complimentary and mailed to every household in the United States.

Despite the advertising campaign Kappernick is not worried. In the words of his friend, "the only people in the world that still fear Tebow are Steelers' fans since he knocked them as far out of relevance as he did to himself."

From Splinter to Lucy

Hey Lucy, I'm home! Earlier this year, scientists announced the discovery of the oldest human ancestor, Protungulatum Donnae. Scientists have been debating over the layman's name for the rat-sized mammal, but the camp with the most support has dubbed the animal Tryon Timon. The name is quite fitting, as the skeleton of this 66 million year old skeleton that looks like the cute little Lion King movie character Timon was found in Tryon Creek State Park, approximately 0.7 miles behind Lewis and Clark Law School. To celebrate the ground breaking archaeological find, Lewis and Clark Law School has announced that it is renaming the library to Timon and Pumbaa's Book House.

Law Student Confesses to De

The DEA converged on a Lewis and Clark law student in downtown Portland this weekend. The unnamed student was caught red-handed purchasing performance enhancing drugs in an undercover sting operation. The student was ranked first in his class, but clearly his street-smarts were not as good as his book-smarts. The student failed to realize that the drugs were not intelligence-enhancing, but muscle-enhancing. A classmate commented on the arrest, "This explains why he came back from winter break with such an amazing six-pack." To add insult to injury, his Moot Court sponsor Westberg-Nexis dropped him from his $5 million contract. The fallout of this shocking arrest has led to the investigation of the of the entire Moot Court team.

Charlie Attacks Cupid

Charlie Sheen was arraigned yesterday on charges of killing the Valentines Spirit. On February 14th, 2013, Mr. Sheen took to twitter and bashed @cupidlove, accusing him of monopolizing the sacred day for buying chocolate and diamonds for your soul-mate and then slipping quietly out the back-door at 3:00 AM to drive downtown to pick up a limo full of prostitutes and acid and party the night away. The ironic part of this whole story is that is exactly the charges Mr. Sheen is facing in Los Angeles County District Court next month. He was arrested on February 15th at 3:00 AM for sex-solicitation and hallucinogenic drug possession.

Library Book Sculptures Reveal Students No Longer Use Books

Administration Considers Converting Space to Better
Meet Student Needs

A wave of holiday-themed "book sculptures" constructed by Boley library staff have revealed an unsettling fact—the library's contents are more useful as art supplies than research tools. Recent sculptures have featured a Christmas tree and a valentine's heart.

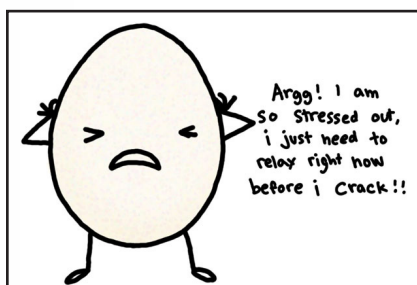

"It started as just a bit of holiday cheer," said one staffer, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "But after a few weeks, we realized no one had asked to look at any of the books."

The administration, which continues to evaluate the Law School's fiscal and academic future in the face of an uncertain legal market, has taken the opportunity to consider whether retaining the library is the correct course for the School.

"We're considering all our options to best serve the law school community," said Dean Klonoff at a recent "Cuisine with the Dean" event. He noted that several ideas had been proposed to convert the library facility into more practical space for faculty, staff, and programs. Options include a proposed John A. Bogdanski Center for Social Media, a home for the re-named "Crimerise" (formerly the National Crime Victim Law Institute), or indoor bicycle parking.

One upside to the discovery is clear—the library's resident sculptors have their pick of book sizes and colors to do their best work.

"We're really going to up the ante," said the library staffer. "We're thinking about a two-story Washington Monument with fireworks in Wood Hall for the 4th."
