

LL.M. Application Packet: Animal Law

Summary of Program

The post-J.D. master of laws (LL.M.) program is designed for U.S. and international law school graduates who desire to focus on animal law in practice, teaching, research or public policy. The program is appropriate for recent law graduates or established lawyers who want to enhance their understanding of animal law for either their current or future practice.

The program requires all LL.M. students to complete 26 semester hours of study. Requirements can be completed in as few as nine months or spread over two and a half years. Students may begin their studies in either the fall or spring semester with classes meeting during the day and evening. Summer classes are also available.

Our LL.M. students have access to the same extensive course offerings as our J.D. students, along with opportunities to enroll in the Animal Law Clinic, work on the Animal Law Review journal, join the Student Animal Legal Defense Fund chapter, and attend the Animal Law Conference and Law Review Symposium.

Please consult our website, CenterForAnimalLawStudies.org, for a complete description of the LL.M. program, courses, and faculty.

Academic Calendar

The law school is on the semester system, with 13 weeks of classes and two weeks of exams in each semester. The fall semester generally begins the last week of August and ends the second or third week of December for a three-week winter break. The spring semester generally begins in mid-January and ends in early May, with a one-week spring break in March.

Admissions Criteria

Admission to the LL.M. program is highly competitive. Applicants must be graduates of a U.S. or international law school and must demonstrate an excellent academic record, strong legal research and writing skills, and an interest in animal law. Membership in the bar is not necessary for admission.

Each application is evaluated as a whole. We are interested in your scholarly capacity, your skills as a lawyer, your academic performance, and your interest in the animal law field.

We welcome applications from international law school graduates who wish to learn more about animal law in the U.S. legal system. However, the program is not suitable for students seeking an introduction to U.S. law or basic comparative law studies. The animal law LL.M. alone is not designed to equip international students for U.S. practice or to take the U.S. bar exam.

LL.M. students can expect extensive reading assignments, vigorous class discussion, and either a written examination or extensive research paper in each course. For international students, superb English language skills are essential.

Costs and Financial Aid

Please contact the Center for Animal Law Studies for the current cost of tuition. The actual cost in any semester depends on the number of credits a student takes. In addition, there are other costs (books, fees, health insurance, and living expenses) that should be calculated into a total expense.

Financial aid (in the form of loans) is available to qualified U.S. students. International students are encouraged to explore funding options with their governments or private foundations. We will work to minimize the costs of the LL.M. program to make this innovative, high-quality legal education a possibility for all accepted students (both U.S. and international).

If you plan to apply for loans (available to qualified U.S. citizens), request financial aid forms by checking the box on the attached application. You should complete and return the financial aid forms as soon as possible. Because financial aid decisions may lag behind admission decisions, you should not wait until you have received an offer of admission to apply for financial aid.

Application Deadlines

For U.S. students, applications for fall semester (August) admission are due March 15 each year; applications for spring semester (January) admission are due August 15 each year. For international students, applications for fall semester are due by February 15. However, we consider all U.S. and international applications on a rolling basis and accept applications throughout the year. We will also consider applications past the admissions deadlines if there is still room in the class.

Application Instructions

To apply, please submit the following to the Center for Animal Law Studies (address on next page):

- This completed LL.M. application, signed and dated.
- Nonrefundable $50 application fee. (Please make any checks payable to Lewis & Clark Law School.)
- Statement of purpose: In 500 words or fewer, explain your objective in pursuing an animal law LL.M. Please be thoughtful in your explanation as to why you believe this degree will be valuable and comment on your long-term professional goals.
- References: Three letters of reference written by people who know you well, written to help the Admissions Committee evaluate your academic capacity and ethical character, writing and research skills, and professional ability as a lawyer using concrete examples and descriptions. The letters do not need to be sealed and may be submitted directly to the law school or with the other application materials. Letters for international applicants should discuss ability to study in a U.S. law school and facility with English, if known.
- Current resume or curriculum vitae.
- Writing sample of approximately 10–15 pages that demonstrates your ability to organize, reason, and communicate. The sample need not be animal law in nature, but should be an example of legal writing that demonstrates your best writing, research, and analytical skills.
- Official transcripts from all law schools and any post-graduate programs attended whether or not a degree was granted sent directly to the Center for Animal Law Studies. –International students must send official English translations.
- International students only:
 - TOEFL score or other measure of facility with English (e.g., other tests of English or previous study in an English-speaking school). Our minimum scores are the following:

Internet-based TOEFL (IBT): 100
IELTS: 8

Admission Process

Your admission file is created when the law school receives your completed application form and application fee. You may choose to submit all of your documents at once or to submit as many of the documents as you can at one time, with other items such as transcripts and reference letters, to follow. For U.S. students seeking loans, please submit and file financial aid forms as soon as possible; do not wait until you have received an offer of admission.

Once your file is complete, the Admissions Committee will review it and contact you regarding the decision. If you accept an offer of admission, you must submit a nonrefundable tuition deposit of $250 within three weeks after notification of admission to hold your place in the class. Please make any checks payable to Lewis & Clark Law School.

For efficiency and environmental reasons, we use email to update candidates on the status of their files whenever we can.
