NCVLI offers a range of trainings: introductory for those new to victims' rights; advanced for those who want to deepen their knowledge of a particular topic; and practical skills for those working in the trenches.

Trainings are customizable by audience, length and learning objective, and can be taught in-person, using distance-learning technology, or through a combination of methods. Because protecting victims' rights is often a multidisciplinary endeavor, NCVLI routinely partners with medical and mental health professionals to co-train.

Whether your audience consists of prosecutors, advocates, judges, law enforcement, allied professionals, community partners, students, or a combination of these, and whether you have 1 hour or 2 days, a training from NCVLI will improve your understanding of and ability to protect victims' rights.
